Mr. Joseph Gorab
Superintendent

Q — What do you consider an education to be?

MR. GORAB — Education is primarily change and adaption to change as a result of our changing society. Education is not restricted to one particular agency, but comes from many sources: home, school, church, and other outside activities. Change occurs from the interactions of all of these, affecting us in varying ways, not always in the same direction. Youth must sharpen its sense of values so that it can face life and its problems.

MR. CORAZZA — Many people confuse schooling with education. All subjects should produce some change. They should broaden the student's outlook.

Q — What are some of the fundamental values needed to solve the problems of our changing world?

MR. GORAB — There are certain values pertaining to the development of the mind, physical development of the body, moral values which pertain to spiritual values. Education strives to achieve an inter-relation among all values. They are inter-related. Some become more important than others in relation to the particular situation.

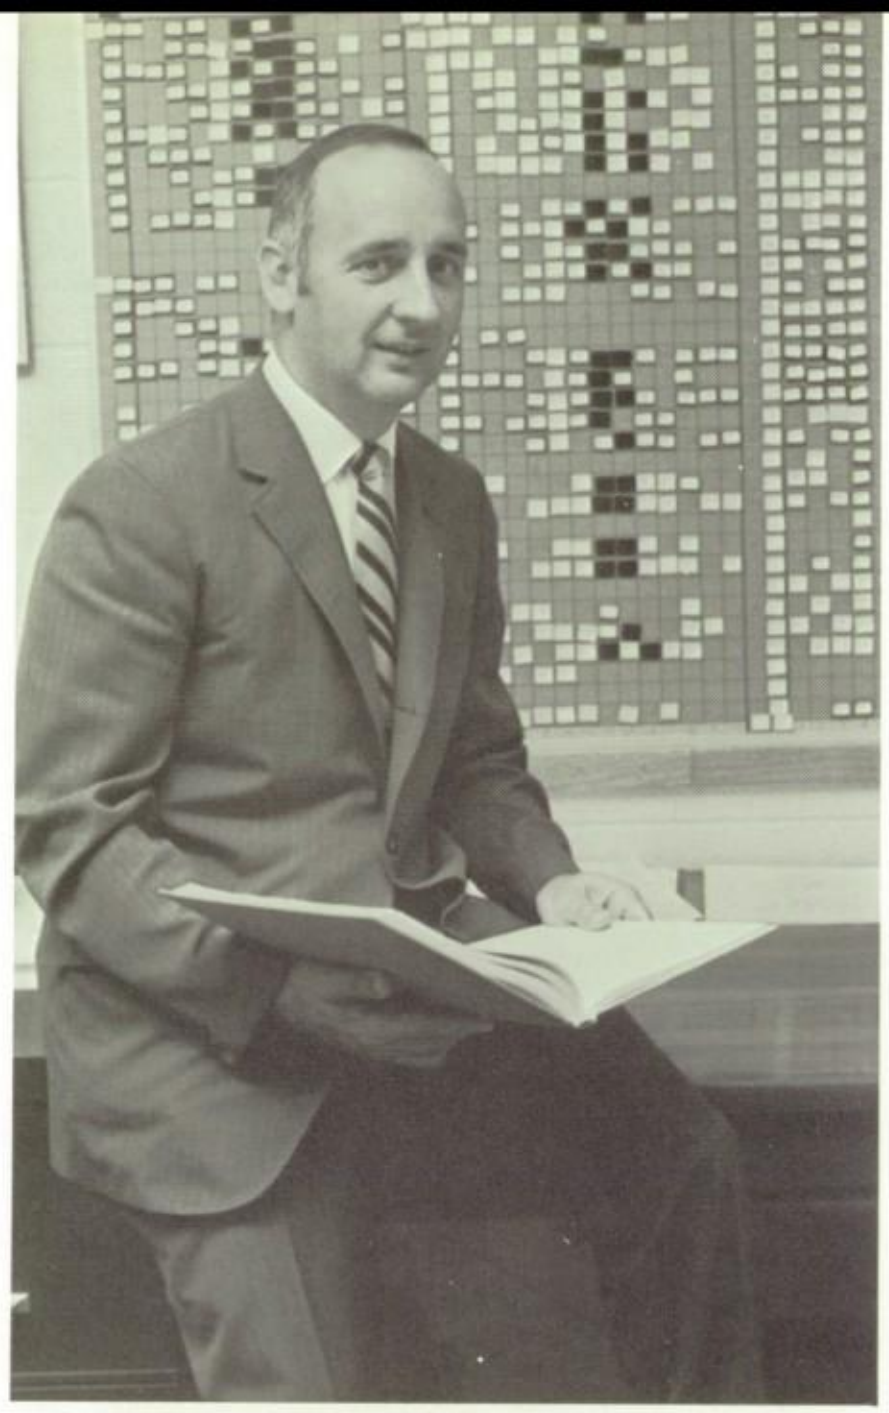
MR. CORAZZA — I think that you are referring more to the problems of the world today. Society emphasizes a certain thing at a certain time. Science and mathematics were emphasized about ten years ago because of Sputnik. Now the concern is human values. Technology is not everything. The trend is toward teaching the humanities, psychology, and sociology.

MR. GORAB — Caring is the word. There is a change toward caring for one's fellow man. Man has caught up with his technology and come to the realization that he must temper pure science with humanity.

Q — What are some of the new directions in education?

MR. GORAB — There are many new directions, but I do not know which will withstand the test of time. The age of automation is upon us, the age of tremendous technology. Corresponding emphasis must be placed on the cultivation of understanding, psychology, human relationships. Since high school is the final formal learning experience for so many, it must help people develop the ability to deal with each other. They must develop mutual understanding and appreciation, not merely tolerance.

MR. CORAZZA — An interdisciplinary approach is being used more and more in high schools. English, history, and the arts are combined into humanities courses. Science and math are taught together. You must make the material relevant to the student. The emphasis must be on more individualized instruction — the student working alone with the teacher as a guide, not a leader. Unless you get the student involved, he will not learn.



Mr. Paul E. Corazza
Principal
Mr. Robert Spreen
Administrative Assistant

MR. SPREEN — True education is a one to one relationship between the learner and the teacher. You should not lose the personal relationship. That is the dilemma of the large high school. In order to reduce costs and offer more courses, school districts are enlarging. Both the student and the teacher lose their individuality. The social values which are learned through personal relationships are lost because the student must know and respect the teacher to learn from him. The student must also be known as an individual. Much of the unrest at the colleges is because the faculty does not know the students as individuals. More than anything else, the student wants to be recognized as a person in his own right.

MR. GORAB — We entered the age of specialization some time ago. Educators tried to close each subject off in its separate compartment which, when fit in with the others, would form the whole. This did not work because the relationships between the subjects were not emphasized and the students could not put them into the proper perspective.

Q — Mr. Gorab, in your years at Manchester have you seen any significant changes in the attitudes or behavior of the students?

MR. GORAB — I haven't seen any particular changes in attitude. The students are expressing the same hopes and desires, but in a different way. Youth is a wonderful age. Youth is the most idealistic time and at the same time the one in which the greatest errors can be made. Young people want to be recognized and will do whatever is necessary to gain that recognition.

Q — Taking Manchester graduates as the norm, are you optimistic or pessimistic about today's generation?

MR. SPREEN — Optimistic, you have to be optimistic. The students today have faults, as in the past, but they are well-versed now in the cognitive skills. We have more intelligent students. We know that intelligence can be developed. With all our advanced techniques the young are breaking away, returning to the human values which many had cast aside.

Q — Looking into the future, where do you think this world is heading, into an Aquarian age of peace or have we more problems to face?

MR. CORAZZA — I hope it will be an age of peace, but we live in an imperfect world. All people are imperfect. We must accept their faults. As long as there are people in the world, there will be problems to solve.

MR. GORAB — Progress is the process of building and tearing down. Life is incessant motion by the very nature of people and society. When man learns to control himself we will have made the millenium. Man must discover that peace and happiness are the by-products of work, sacrifice, and service.
